AUTUMN LEAVES.

BY S. A. W.

Still nearer comes and still,
The Autumn, sad and chill,
And frosty winds call shrill
Among the trees.
And earth its sombre pall
Is donning as they call,
And dead and dying fall
The Autumn leaves.

The leaves fall thick and fast
Before the chilly blast,
And sombre-hued are cast,
Heaped up to die,

Or here or there to go,
With restless winds that blow,
Or rustic sad and low,
As lone they lie.

The Winter's coming on,

The song birds all are gone,
And earth is fair to don

Its robes of death,
As Summer's leaves grow pale

And rustle in the gale,
And louder is the wail

Of Autumn's breath.

The gorgeous hues in aid
Grow brighter as they fade,
And changing e'er is laid
All over the ground.

That comes rich and gay,
Of hues, though sad, so fair,
That Nature p'v't h'ab'e'r
To weave around.

Though Summer's flowers all die,
And dead leaves scattered lie,
As here or there e'er fly,

No rest to find,
I'love the Autumn drear,
And music to my ear

As those sad notes I hear
Borne on the wind.

The Spring may be replete
With flowers of fragrance sweet,

Its songsters, too, may greet

With sweetest chime;

But Spring flows ne'er are strong,

And Spring flows last not long,

And silent is the song

At Autumn time.

'Tis sweet indeed midst flow'r's
Of Spring, in fragrant bow'rs,

To pass the golden hours;

But golden sheaves

Come not before the sky

Grows dark and clouds draw nigh,

And in the blasts thick fly

The Autumn leaves.

The Age of Hurry.

The most striking characteristic of the age in which we live is the breathless haste with which we perform almost every action of our lives; nay, even the unimportant actions become of consequence by reason of the rapidity with which it is necessary to bring to bear upon them. The commonest excuse of the present day is, "I really have not time" to do this or that. "I have not a moment to spare" is the hasty statement which we hear twenty times a day. "Well, I can give you two or three minutes," is the ready reply of the business man whose advice you wish for gratis. If the desired interview has anything to do with the possible and probable acquisition of money, the usual hurry will to a certain extent calm down, because the great hurry of time is to get a good place in the race of wealth, and breathing time for the purpose of considering the ground is not looked upon as wasted. Hurry extends even to religion, as we see in the general tendency to shorten the services of the church. And what a sign, too, of universal hurry in the telegraph system! This system is doubtless far from perfect yet, and before long we shall probably ourselves employing the electric wire for the greater part of our correspondence. Private houses will be provided with a magnetic system which will entirely supersede the use of bells. For instance, more butter is wanted at breakfast; the fact is communicated to the domestic offices by electricity, and the butter is brought without the necessity of verbal order, and so at least fifty per cent of time is gained. The time will come when we shall wonder how people could possibly have tolerated the anxiety of waiting forty-eight hours for a letter. Such a state of things will be almost as rare as traveling by mail-coach. There is one aspect of hurry however in which the reaction appears to be setting in. Desirous as we may be of getting over the ground quickly when traveling from place to place, an alarming chapter of railway accidents is inducing us to believe that after all our lives and limbs are worth some consideration, and that traveling at sixty miles an hour has drawbacks so long as there is a chance of colliding with a shunting freight train. Perhaps a little further reflection will lead us to think that speed in other phases of existence is not compatible with safety, and that after all there is something to be said in favor of the habits of the tortoise. Macbeth says: "If it were done now 'twere well it were done quickly"; but then that misguiding chieftain had got a murder in his eye, and therefore his practice makes against the theory.

WASHINGTON, March 31st.

Col. Coey has been confirmed as Postmaster at San Francisco.

Luttrell has introduced a bill to admit free of duty for two years on this coast all machinery for the manufacture of jute cloth and bag material.

All quiet at Schenectady depot. The town is in possession of the troops.

FOREIGN NEWS.

LONDON, March 31st.

A message to the Times says that the steamship Nile was lost on her voyage from Hongkong to Yokohama and all her passengers drowned. Among them were the Japanese Commissioners to the Vienna Exhibition.

Pacific Coast Telegrams.

SAN FRANCISCO.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 31st.

Hongkong dispatches state that eighty persons were drowned by the sinking of the steamer Nile.

Reports from the famine districts of India show an improved condition of the people there.

The insurgents of Cuba turned incendiaries, making great havoc in plantations.

The steamer Rising Star had gone out of dock at Bermuda and will sail in a few days.

A Washington dispatch says the inflationists in the Senate have a working majority of at least five.

Richards is reported to have avowed his purpose to retire from the Treasury.

The additional currency which Congress threatens is $46,000,000 for national banks, making a total bank issue and greenbacks $800,000,000.

Thirty-one persons were sent from this city to the Stockton Insane Asylum this month. Twelve were females.

The steamer Mikado sailed for Honolulu and Australia to-day.

Vasco de Gama arrived at Hongkong March 24th, thirty days in passage from San Francisco.

SACRAMENTO.

SACRAMENTO, March 31st.

The Legislature adjourned last night at 12 o'clock.

The Governor has signed the bill providing for two terms of the Supreme Court being held in San Francisco. The Harbor Commission bill was defeated; also the bill for redistricting the city of San Francisco.

The next letter was from Philadelphia, an anonymous attack of the bitterest description, impugning his motives concerning his speech on the International Centennial Exposition, winding up with a threat of violence, which I forbear to transcribe. As he handed it to me he said, good-humoredly, "I am used to such letters." I read it, and, as I did so, consigned it to the blazing grate. The next letter was from Indiana, one of those good, whole-souled letters, full of sympathy and admiration, with an urgent, earnest invitation for him to visit the writer next Summer, with an offer of generous and unstinted hospitality. "There," said he, "you have burned the bane, and here is the antidote." His next letter was from Boston, full of hearty thankfulness for his restoration to health, and cheer for the future. It was closely written, and, as he handed it to me, he said, "This is no sumner friend."

Pendegast defended his schedule. He thought it was the best. He opposed legislating as to freights on merchandise, there being no necessity for it, and it being likely to be harmful rather than beneficial.

The vote was taken on Irwin's motion, which was carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Bartlett, Bush, Crane, De Haven, Eakin, Edgerton, Farley, Goodale, Hendricks, Irwin, Laine, Lindsey, Martin, McCune, McMurry, O'Connor, Perkins, Roach, Spencer, Tuttle—20.

It being a tie, President Pacheco voted ay, and the Pendegast schedule was stricken out, and the Irwin bill substituted thereto.

The question was then taken on the engrossment of the bill, which was ordered by the following vote:

Ayes—Beck, Boggs, Duffy, Dyer, Evans, Finney, Fraser, Garratt, Gibbons, Graves, Hopking, Kent, Keys, McCoy, McKusick, Neff, Oulton, Pendegast, Turner, Tuttle—28.

Nos—Andros, Beck, Boggs, Duffy, Dyer, Evans, Finney, Fraser, Garratt, Gibbons, Graves, Hopking, Kent, Keys, McCoy, McKusick, Neff, Oulton, Pendegast, Turner, Tuttle—20.

It is stated that a careful analysis of the bill is to be made, and that after all there is something to be said in favor of the habits of the tortoise. Macbeth says: "If it were done now 'twere well it were done quickly"; but then that misguiding chieftain had got a murderer in his eye, and therefore his practice makes against the theory.

An Interview with Sumner the Night Before His Fatal Illness.

At 8 o'clock on Monday evening, I made my last call on Senator Sumner. He greeted me, saying: "I am so weary thinking over my speech on finance, I wanted a change—a ray of sunlight—and I am glad you came. He at once began to talk on European politics, which, to him, was the spread map, and whose kaleidoscopic changes he always viewed with absorbing interest. He spoke of Gladstone—his noble struggle in the cause of liberalism, his success, his failure, and his fall; he gave a sketch of a breakfast with him, and summed up by expressions of his firm faith in the ultimate triumph of those principles which Gladstone so nobly championed. "A great man under the shadow of a defeat," said he, "I taught how precious are the uses of adversity, and an old oak-tree root is strengthened by its shadow, so all defeat is good." He then spoke of the patchwork Empire of Germany, of Bismarck and De la Marmora—the truth stranger than fiction, viz.: of the statesman's assertion of Bismarck's offer to cede to France a portion of German territory—the policy of the annexation of Alsace and Lorraine, of the differences with the Catholic Church, the imprisonment of her pretlates—and then taking a volume of Milton he read in deep, rich tones of tender melancholy, his famous sonnet upon the persecution of the Waldenses during Cromwell's protectorate, as follows:

... O Lord! thy slaughtered saints,
Whose bones lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold;
Ere yet the sun who kept thy truth so pure of old,
When all our fathers worshipped stocks and stones,

... Forgive not; in thy book record their groans,
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold,
Slay by the bloody Piedmontese that rolled
Mother with infant down the rocks. Their

... To Heaven. Their martyred blood and ashes sow
Over the Italian fields where still doth sway
The triple tyrant; that from these may Early, may fly the Babylonian wo.

In closing he added, "Thus history revenges herself." About this time his evening mail was brought; whenever he came to one interesting note or letter he would look it over and then hand it to me to read. The first was from an art association in Boston, saying that the Duke de Montpensier of Spain, had agreed to loan his valuable collection of pictures, valued at $500,000, to the association, provided they paid packing, transportation, and insurance; and as the laws of the United States limit the time of international law free of duty to six months, it needed a special act of Congress to keep the paintings two years, so as to pay expense by their exhibition, and he desired speedy legislation. He asked me if I had seen them when in Spain. I answered him I had, and described several of them as excellent. "The best," he said, "in the Senate I do not think will be much difficult but in the House," he added smiling. "Ben Butler can put it through, as he does, with his white horse, everything else. Why, he is a political Cagliostro."

The next letter was from Philadelphia, an anonymous attack of the bitterest description, impugning his motives concerning his speech on the International Centennial Exposition, winding up with a threat of violence, which I forbear to transcribe. As he handed it to me he said, good-humoredly, "I am used to such letters." I read it, and, as I did so, consigned it to the blazing grate. It has long been known that the simplest method of sharpening a razor is to put it half an hour in water to which a few drops of oil of turpentine or sulphuric acid have been added, then lightly wipe it off after a few hours set it on a hone. The acid here supplies the place of a whetstone by corroding the whole surface uniformly, so that nothing further than a smooth polish is necessary. The process never injures good blades, while badly hardened ones are frequently improved by it, although the cause of this improvement remains unexplained.

"The more the merrier" is a maxim that is agreed to as clever; yet the suspicion that Othello entertained of Desdemona's faithlessness did not make the Moor the merrier.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

WEDNESDAY.....APRIL 1, 1874.

CITY AND SUBURBS.

The ladies hold another temperance meeting this afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The Senator and Kalorama leave today. Passengers take the train at 10 this morning.

Enterprise Grange, Patrons of Husbands, gives a grand ball at Turn Verein Hall to-night.

This is April Fool's day; beware of bogus pocket-books and all other snares and delusions prepared for the unwary.

Rev. Mr. Packard of the Congregational church, will preach at the M. E. church on Fort street this evening at 7 o'clock.

The carpenters and plasterers are at work making changes and repairs in Masonic Hall, and have everything inside pretty generally at sixes and sevens.

The Southern Pacific Railroad Company will soon open an office at Spadra Geo. North, of Riverside, will assume charge of the depot and business at that place.

The colored people of this city held their Fifteenth Amendment ball in Stearns' Hall last night. There was quite a large turnout, and all passed off very pleasantly.

Second street between Hill and Fort streets is being somewhat improved by grading. The same thing would be a great benefit if it were only done to more of our streets.

To-night the Jewish feast of the "Passach" begins and will last for a week. Some of the Jewish families will gather together to-night in private houses and have the usual feast.

A warrant is out for the arrest of E. N. Benson on a charge of assaulting Ramon Feli. This is the difficulty which all grew out of a jack-knife and a little misunderstanding.

A lot of workmen were late for the train this morning and had quite a race before the engineer could stop for them. They did not seem to enjoy the fun very much, but the bystanders liked it hugely.

Complaint was brought yesterday before Justice Trafford against some party, name unknown, for assault and battery committed against Henry B. Katz. The offender was brought before the Court, tried and acquitted.

P. Beaudry has fitted up and repaired his store rooms on the corner of Los Angeles and Commercial streets. Call and see them before you rent any other place. They are in a good business locality. See his advertisement.

The Police report things extremely dull in their line. If we only had a stringent vagrant law in force it would furnish employment for our worthy stars, and some of those Mexican gentlemen with dirty faces and elegant leisure could adorn our chain-gang.

One of the largest horses which have ever been seen appeared on Main street yesterday. The animal, one of the Samson breed, stands nineteen hands high and weighs nineteen hundred pounds—a hand for every hand. He is the property of a Mr. Wolfgong, and is valued at $3,000.

Don't forget the "Ladies' Temperance Meeting" to-day at Good Templars' Hall. As business of importance is to be transacted, a full attendance is greatly desired. The movement being started is a very good one, and we hope that it will meet with success in this city. To do so, more than there are at present will have to take a hand in the work.

According to the advertisements now in the papers of this city, there are to be two different entertainments to-night in Turn Verein Hall, the Grangers' ball and Prof. Fowler's lecture. As it is not very probable that both will go on at the same time we guess that the Professor will have to give way to the Grangers. We would like very much to hear the Professor lecture, but the people would much rather attend a ball than a lecture.

The WEEKLY HERALD, to be issued next Saturday, will contain original articles on most of the important industries in this county, and also full accounts of the most important projects now under way in Southern California. It will be the best number ever issued from this office. Persons having friends in the East who are desirous of gaining reliable information about our country will do well to procure copies of the coming number and mail them. We will print a great many extra copies of the issue, and parties desirous of obtaining them will find them at our office all ready done up to mail.

To-morrow night the Templeton Star Alliance will give one of their pleasing entertainments in the Merced Theater. The performance will consist of "Faithful Wives, or Still Waters Run Deep," and, by request, Fay Templeton's great specialty, "Parepa Rosa." The popularity gained by this troupe on their former visit here will insure them a full house, but those who had not the pleasure of attending then will do well to improve the opportunity now offered. Owing to other engagements, the troupe will be able to remain with us but three days, but we hope they will come round again some time during their stay in Southern California.

From the statement in last evening's Express it seems that Vasquez is again heard from. Our reporter yesterday endeavored to find Mr. Madigan and ascertain the true facts in the case, but could not do so, as that gentleman is now out on an assessing tour through the county. We clip the following without vouching for it: "Mike Madigan, while out assessing a few days since, was overhauled on the road by a man whom he recognized as the famous Tiburco Vasquez. Not at all dismayed by the company of this renowned bandit, he rode along with him a whole day, chatting good-humored all the way. As they were about to separate, Vasquez handed Mike two dollars, saying: 'Don Miguel, let it not be said that Vasquez would seek to evade a miserable poll-tax imposed by a Government which has so high an appreciation of his value as to offer $15,000 for his head. Here, let my mite be contributed to maintain so good and liberal an administration!' Miguel has officially returned the poll-tax of Tiburco Vasquez."

Many a man thinks it's virtue that keeps him from turning a rascal when it's only a full stomach. One should always be careful and not mistake policies for principles.

A Portland editor speaks of an alderman of that city as "the wooden-headed fool from the Fourth ward."

"My Offense is Rank; It Smelt Unto Heaven."

However rank the offense of the conscience-stricken wretch, it could not compare for a moment with the concentrated villainy of the gutters down a portion of Main and Spring streets. Fever, plague, pestilence and all horrors of death, steam up in the poisonous exhalations from the green, slimy ooze. The breeze is tainted with it; the night is sick because of it. 'Tis said that "conscience doth make cowards of us all." We defy conscience to equal the unnerving effect of these gutters upon one of ordinary refinement or sensibility. All the terrors of an evil conscience, facing a battery of field-pieces, could not equal the aforesaid gutter. The hero of battles would turn pale, grow quaking at the stomach and become the veriest poltroon. Seriously, however, joking aside, do the good people realize that hot weather is rapidly approaching? Hot weather—and fever? The gods help those who help themselves! Climate, sea-breeze and odors of the orange groves will not save us from malarious and bilious fevers, if the concentrated, double-distilled essence of disease daily and nightly ascends to our nostrils. It is better to learn the lesson at the beginning rather than at the end of the hot season. Cleanliness is said to be next after godliness. We are not certain but until the hot weather is over, the order might safely be reversed. Clean the gutters, citizens! clean the gutters! Possibly, then, you may have fewer bitter tears to shed when the rains have again made the grave yards rains.

Dropped Dead in the Street.

A sad accident occurred yesterday evening in front of Delmonico's restaurant on Main street, resulting in the death of S. Levy. The deceased was about thirty years of age, and it seems has been suffering from rheumatism for some time past. About 6 o'clock yesterday evening he took supper at Delmonico's restaurant, and upon stepping out upon the street was taken with a violent fit of coughing, during which the aneurism gave way, opening into the lungs, and he immediately expired. We understand that the deceased lately returned to this city from San Francisco and was on his way to San Bernardino, where he was engaged in business. He has been known in Los Angeles for some two years past. The body was taken in charge by the Coroner and conveyed to a room in the old tannery in the southeastern part of the city, where it will await an inquest this morning.

Dramatic Club—Shall we Have One?

The entertainment given by Mr. Piercy last Monday night developed the fact that we have much talent in the amateurs of our city waiting only for an occasion to call it out. Now we would suggest that an amateur dramatic club be formed by the young ladies and gentlemen of Los Angeles. Call it the Sidons Club or the Shakespearean Combination, or the Apollo Belvederes—anything, in fact, for a name—and let an entertainment be given once or twice a month, the proceeds to be devoted to some benevolent object; say the widows and orphans of the Club. By so doing the members of such an organization would furnish pleasant and profitable diversion for themselves and most agreeable entertainment for their friends. Let us have a dramatic club.

Los Angeles Schools.

A visitor here gives us the following favorable opinion of our public schools:

EDITOR HERALD: A careful survey of the inner workings of the airy and healthy location of the plan and arrangement of the building and rooms of the large public school-house show that it compares favorably with any in the State. The school is ably superintended and the different departments well organized. The citizens may well be proud of the building. The view from it is one of the finest I ever saw. Located on a hill, it commands a view of the entire Los Angeles valley down to the sea, and back to the mountains. The existence of such fine buildings is proof to Eastern people of the great progressive spirit of your citizens.

STRANGER.

Trojan Discoveries.

The New York Tribune of March 24 contains a letter of wonderful interest from the great traveler Bayard Taylor, giving an advance review of a German publication containing a full, illustrated report of the discoveries of Dr. Schliemann in the Troad. It tells not only of discovering ancient Troy, but of a still older civilization upon the ruins of which are found the ruins of the long-lost city. After a sketch of the distinguished explorer, of the difficulties he encountered and his reasons for finally selecting Hisarlik as the site of the old city, the letter continues:

A few months after the publication of his volume ("Ithaca, the Peloponnesus, and Troy") Schliemann returned to Greece. From this permanent home, before beginning again his researches, he married an accomplished Greek lady who won his heart by her enthusiasm for his labors and her knowledge of Homer.

On the 11th of October the work was begun with eight men, but on the second day afterward seventy-four men were employed in removing the upper soil. The winter rains, which set in toward the end of November obliged Schliemann to suspend labor until the following Spring. On the 1st of April 1872, Schliemann, accompanied by his wife, as usual, reached the Troad and resumed operations with a force of 100 workmen. Until the 14th of August, a period of four months and half, the work was patiently driven forward. On the 17th of June 1873, the researches came to an end. What has been uncovered will be left so, and it is hoped that the legend of the Savior's visit to King Priam will take root among the ignorant modern Trojans and preserve the walls which no other argument could sacred to them.

Schliemann's explorations are like a play in five acts: 1869, '70, '71, '72 and '73—the interest increasing until it culminates in a grand dénouement, and then the curtain falls. Schliemann's wonderful success in 1872 was due in a great measure to the conclusions which he had reached during the excavations of 1872. He continued the classification of the ruins and the reliefs which they contained, and soon found that they might be divided into four distinct strata, each of which represented a long historical period. Further comparison convinced him that the third of these strata, counting from the top, was the only one that met the requirements of Homer and Greek traditions; consequently here was Troy. But under Troy there was an earlier layer of ruin, varying from twenty to twenty-three feet in depth, before this primitive soil was reached. This discovery is hardly less interesting than that of the position of Troy. It carries the antiquity of the city back into that immense past shadow of the human race which stretches like a mysterious twilight land behind our oldest history.

The geographical position of Ilion explains its importance in these far-off ages. The gorges of Ida protect it in the rear; seated at the junction of the Hellespont with the Aegean, it made a station at Colchis at the eastern extremity of the Euxine, and all the Great Roman, Persian and Phoenician coast; the rich plain around it furnished abundant supplies which could readily be exchanged for foreign merchandise, and as its people became rich and impregnable within its citadel town the other and ruder tribes in their neighborhood would yield to their power. It is certainly older by a great many centuries than Athens, and its immemorial importance was no doubt the first cause of the jealousy of the sensitive Greeks.

The ruins of Troy form a stratum averaging ten feet in thickness, the depth (from the surface), reaching from 23 to 33 feet. Since the foundation of the city is conjectured to have taken place about 1400 B. C., and its fall and destruction by fire to have occurred about 1100 B. C., this would give three centuries for the formation of ten feet of ruin—which is quite sufficient if we imagine a small but crowded city with houses of not more than one story and much woodwork of which the ruins have ample evidence. The marks of intense heat are everywhere manifest. When the Sea Gate was first recovered the pavement seemed uniformly perfect, but at the end of two or three months the stone blocks along the upper part of the street which had been exposed to the flame, crumbled almost entirely away to a distance of ten feet back from the gate. The other blocks, protected by their situation remained solid, and promise to stand for centuries.

Finally, under Troy there is a fourth stratum of thirteen to twenty feet in depth, as I have already stated. The age of this is a matter of pure conjecture, since the vicissitudes of the city's history—frequent destruction and rebuilding—would have the same practical effect or nearly so, as a long interval of time. We have anywhere from 2,000 to 5,000 years before Christ taking Egyptian, Phenician or Pelasgic remains as guides—as the date of the foundation of the first Troy.

For Los Angeles.

Ex-Senator Maclay, of Santa Clara county, shipped on Friday last all his bedding, cattle, horses, etc., per steamer to Los Angeles, where he will in future reside. The Senator was one of the most active and enterprising citizens of Santa Clara Valley and will be greatly missed in that section. Southern California, however, is sadly in want of men of his genius and temperament and he will be a decided acquisition to its go-ahead, shrewd business men. We are positive the Senator will give a good account of himself in the future. May success attend him. —[Spirit of the Times.]

For California.

Comstock Dean and wife left for San Francisco last evening. They do not intend to stop in San Francisco, but will go south to Los Angeles, and will either locate there or in that vicinity. The young couple leave many warm friends here who wish them all kinds of good luck.—[Morning Press (Mich.).]
